

SHEELLEN'S CROSSING. A wooden truss bridge at Sheelen's Crossing provided access from North to South Avenues over the track bed. This bridge was called Central Crossing before being replaced in 1966 by the current concrete structure.

RAILROAD VIEWS. A small engine, known as a shunting engine, moved railroad cars to and from the sidings onto the mainline tracks.