

313 SOUTH AVENUE. This beautiful mansion, looking upon South Avenue, was torn down in the 1950s. Curved shingles on the upper part of the house and the rounded portico and stately columns made this home an impressive sight. An office building stands in its place today.

A COLONIAL REVIVAL. Built in the early 1900s, this North Avenue house has the charm of a much older home. With a broad entranceway, the expansion of the house over the years has made the downstairs seem much larger than it must have been in its early history. A striking pair of staircases ascending to the third floor accent the entranceway. The stairwell was so high that it accommodated an 18-foot Christmas tree.
