

INSTRUCTION

Mr. Philip Burd
Supervisor of Instruction

We often see a tall, placid gentleman quietly observing various classes during the school day. He is our Supervisor of Instruction, Mr. Burd. His work includes improving all phases of teaching; conferring with faculty members about classroom control and management, teaching materials, and procedures; offering his impressions and suggestions about improving teaching methods to instructors; and the development and change of our curriculum. Because of Mr. Burd's fine work, our program of studies is fitted to the needs, interests, and abilities of high school youth in a rapidly changing world.

The library . . . a haven of quiet and comfort amid the constant bustle of our school. This large, well equipped set of rooms is an indispensable aid to students and faculty, for here we find a wealth of material—books about almost any subject, magazines for reference and pleasure reading, informative displays, and attractive bulletin boards. Our librarians, who have a remarkable memory for books, facts, and people, are ready to assist any imperceivable student in finding that certain book or magazine.
