

ENGLISH: Department Prepares for Expansion

Thoughts are of no use until they are communicated; language, as a vehicle of communication, is an element of success. Therefore, the study of English is one that is essential to every student, whatever his future. Familiar to him is the mandatory high school English class, in which he learns grammar, reads American and English literature, and expresses himself in his own writing.

However, the complexion of the English Department is changing. Mr. Braynock and the other English teachers have developed plans this year for an expanded curriculum, which might include more intensive courses in English Literature for Sophomores, American Literature for Juniors, and Publishing for Seniors. With the completion of the new addition to SPFHS, there will be a publishing center, which will house the school publications, CULMEN, MUSE, and FANSCOTIAN. Already a new nine-week speech course has been offered throughout the day to more classes than before.
