

Social Studies Department Has “More Fun Than a Little Bit”

People—where they live, their customs, their efforts to improve themselves—is the basis for Social Studies.

There are a variety of courses offered at Scotch Plains-Fanwood High School for Students interested in furthering their knowledge of people and how they behave.

United States History I and II, mandatory courses for Juniors and Seniors, try to stimulate thought by paying close attention to current events. Also our nation's growth and development, our Constitution, and the workings of our government on all levels are explored.

Economics teaches the ways men earn livings and also traces the cycle of buying, selling, producing, and consuming goods which goes on in our society.

Both World Cultures and International Relations are concerned with the study of other civilizations so that students may understand their own environment better. These courses examine the structure of other cultures as well as studying the physical features of the land.

Through Social Studies the student gains the ability to improve himself.

Scotch-Plains students are aided in this discussion by a complete selection of modern maps and charts.

Norm Schwartz, Joe Pawlick, and Grant Davis, politically minded students at S.P.F.H.S., discuss the pros and cons of the Johnson Administration.
