

Spring comes as a welcome relief to the grey-ness of winter. It warms the air, thaws the ground, melts the ice in lakes and streams. It prepares the earth for a new way of life. The sun seems to shine brighter than it did in the winter. New plants bring color to the monotony of the landscape. There is a feeling of freshness, an urge to explore new things present in the air.

Students find themselves in the final burst of activity before the closing of school. Proms, sports, projects and final exams are all squeezed into the space of a few months, yet the work and pressure does not seem as great as it did in the fall and winter. The days pass more quickly, problems seem less oppressive. Life is something to be enjoyed . . .
