

The Language Lab is an invaluable aid in improving the comprehension of foreign languages. Here Mme. Hiete plays a French tape for the students.

Mme. Larson demonstrates the various instructional uses of the language laboratory to Mr. Peacock, a visiting principal from a New Zealand high school.

Renovations in the Language Department this year resulted in increased organization and greater emphasis on the speaking of the language itself. Greater use of the language laboratory with more variety in materials used helped students become more familiar with the actual accents, expressions, and culture of the language they studied. The Language Laboratory Assistants Club, organized for the first time this year, helped teachers operate and repair the lab during the school day and enabled its members to investigate the technical side of the language laboratory. The language department co-ordinator was another new addition. Mrs. Heite studied and investigated new advances and techniques in the foreign language field, and kept abreast of the latest changes and best methods of teaching foreign languages today.
