

Exams are over. Books are returned, lockers emptied. Seniors are seen wandering through the halls with caps and gowns, probably for the last time. It is the end of the year; the end of homework, tests, sports, assemblies, canteens, and for many, long friendships. It is the time to think about just what the year has brought. Has it been good or bad? Productive or wasted? This is something that each person can answer only for himself. What about the student as an individual? Has he grown or stagnated? He has gotten out of the year exactly what he put into it. Success or failure, the year is gone now. There will never be another like it.
