

A blanket of solitude wraps the world in stillness. Nature takes a rest from the gay revelries of sunshine and warmth. The colors of fall fade away for awhile, into slumber. As the white veil spreads over the weary landscape, men everywhere warm their hearts to the hope that spring is not far off. Meanwhile, the spirit of the season is persistent in the life that is hidden beneath the walls which man has built around himself.