

The assembly presented by Poli Sci members activated political curiosities. Charles Ingolia.

The Math Club puts two and two together.

The school gets a lesson in "English" politics.

Political Science Club

. . . looking at divergent philosophies, from capitalism to communism . . . approaching controversies open-mindedly, not endorsing any particular party . . . becoming involved . . . planning the "mock presidential election" assembly . . . annual pilgrimage to Washington, D.C. . . . becoming familiar through study and investigations with the mechanics of our political system . . . youth's enthusiastic endeavors to participate in our government . . . molding the political ideas, and leaders of the near future. . . .

Gaining insight and understanding. Bob Stalgaitus, John Papazian.

Math Club

. . . members sharing an enthusiasm for mathematics . . . students teaching one another . . . preparing dittoed lessons for each meeting . . . learning how to operate the computer; "Information data — 36-24-36" . . . presenting lectures on function and workings of computers . . . enriching one's knowledge of the stimulating field of mathematics. . . .