"Words to Live By"

"Remember your curfew!"

"Keep your room clean!"

"Get off the phone!"

For the past four years we've been inundated with advice from many sources. Some advice we've adopted as common practice, such as wearing a seat belt, or trying to get eight hours of sleep a day (even though we may have used homeroom or a free period to do so). Although we've had to admit some of it was good, we've also had to ignore some pieces of advice for the sake of our reputation. For example, how many of us "turn the music down," or "take off our hats indoors," or "pay attention"?

High school is a time of decisions, and all this advice is often meant to make such decisions easier. So the Culmen staff has chosen as this year's theme "Words to Live By." We have culled advice from some famous and not-so-famous persons and have incorporated the choicest bits throughout this year's book. We hope they may help you in your high school endeavors and beyond.

Sincerely,
The Culmen Staff
