

“Nothing on Earth is so beautiful as the final haul on Halloween night.”
Steve Almond

senior Liz Jacobs

FALL HOLIDAYS

October 31 was the one day of the year when it was socially acceptable to wear outrageous outfits and request candy from total strangers. However, some people argued that “mature” high school students should no longer partake in this traditional Halloween festivity. Many individuals defied this standard as they

“I spent all of Halloween doing Euro homework...it was depressing.”

senior Liz Jacobs

traversed the halls clad in costumes mimicking singers to superheroes, anxious for the school day to end so that trick-or-treating could begin. Some students considered this tradition the highlight of the holiday; others preferred to hang out with friends. Regardless of their personal opinions, no one could deny the appeal of the annual candy-fest.

“Freshman year we went trick-or-treating, but now we do other things and have a good time,” commented senior Candace Barnes.

trick or treat

what's your age again?

Decked out in truly vintage clothing, seniors Caroline Lazur and Julie Madan pay tribute to their favorite people: grandmothers! Madan and Lazur designed their costumes by combining articles from their own grandmas' wardrobes. The two borrowed necklaces from Madan's grandmother, and Lazur turned to her own grandmother for the muumuus. Lazur did not partake in trick-or-treating this year yet enjoyed the holiday immensely. “It's not a big deal for teenagers to go, and more people should definitely dress up,” stated Lazur.

spice up your life!

Imitating the popular '90's British pop band, these seniors strike the group's notorious pose. They bore a striking resemblance to the former band's members. Senior Kara Brass declined trick-or-treating for the third year in a row and opted to “borrow” some of her younger brother's candy instead. “I guess I just lost interest in it, but I think you shouldn't stop just because you're 'too old,’” commented Brass.

Kara Brass, Melissa Koerner, Megan Domenick, Julianne Cerman, Christine DiTrolio

edward scissorhands

Showing off razor-sharp nails, junior Danielle Sepe imitates the protagonist of the cult-favorite movie. Sepe enjoyed dressing up, and trick-or-treating proved to be the best part of her night. “Halloween is a wonderful, whimsical thing,” Sepe remarked.

